

0 500 m - Average walking time 8 minutes

Legend

- P Parking
- $ Paid Parking
- ♿ Washroom
- 🚶 GO Transit

William Granger Greenway (Humber Trail)

This section of the Humber River Trail is dedicated to William Granger, former Toronto Region & Conservation Authority (TRCA) Chair in recognition for his contributions to watershed management. The William Granger Greenway is approximately 5.7 kilometers in length and is an exciting trail that allows you to connect to other systems and key local destinations.

The trail begins at Rutherford Road, linking you to the Boyd Conservation area trails to the south. North of Rutherford Road it crosses the Humber River and connects to Canada Company Avenue and continues north under Major Mackenzie Drive. North of Major Mackenzie you can end your day visiting the Canadian McMichael Art Collection or continue up to Bindertwine Park. The trail is open for hiking, biking, and walking, and includes several exciting pedestrian bridge valley crossings.

Along the trail you will experience several significant natural habitats, cultural and heritage resources, recreational and educational facilities, and the historic aboriginal trade route known as the Toronto Carrying-Place Trail. These attributes contributed to Humber River's designation as a Canadian Heritage River in 1999.

- Access Point(s): Bindertwine Park, Boyd Conservation Area, Rutherford Rd. east of Islington Ave., McMichael Art Collection, Stegman's Mill Road and Islington Avenue at Canada Company Way.
- Total Approximate Distance: 5.7 kilometres
- Parking: Bindertwine Park, Rutherford Road, Al Palladini Community Centre, Foster Woods
- Paid Parking: Boyd Conservation Area, Kortright Centre, McMichael Art Collection

Bartley Smith Greenway and Humber Trail maps courtesy of York Region.